

The Snake and three Crocodiles

One day there was a snake and three crocodiles in the jungle. The snake was scaly and thirsty. He slithered to find some water.

He found a straw and mud house by a lake. He slithered inside. He saw three cups of water - big, medium and small. He tried them. The big water was too muddy. The medium water was too cold but the small one was just right. He drank it all up!

He slithered to the next room. There was three toothbrushes and toothpaste. He brushed his teeth with the one big - it was too minty. The medium one was too spicy. The small toothpaste was just right - he used it all up!

Next, he slithered into another room. There were three mud beds. The snake felt sleepy and tried them. The big mud bed was too squelchy. The medium mud bed was too dry and hard. The small one was just right and he fell asleep.

The three crocodiles returned and were angry. Big Crocodile snapped his teeth, "Who's been drinking my water?"

The medium crocodile said, "Who's been drinking my water?"

The baby crocodile cried, "They've drunk mine all up!"

Next, they find their toothbrushes and toothpaste. They snapped their sharp teeth. Baby Crocodile cried, "They've used mine all up!"

Then they went into the bedroom and Big Crocodile roared, "Who's been sleeping in my mud bed?" Medium Crocodile snapped, "Who's been sleeping in my bed?" baby Crocodile cried, "Look, they're still in my mud bed." Snake woke up, quickly uncurled himself and slithered off into the jungle as fast as he could, never to be seen again.
